Subject Overview:	This subject teaches the craft of writing hard and soft news stories, as well as features, for newspapers and newspaper supplements and magazines. With an emphasis on news writing, students learn what news is and how (and why) news priorities and story treatment may differ between print, broadcast and online. The subject also looks at how traditional news/feature writing differs from other forms of journalistic writing such as blogs or opinion/ comment pieces. Students learn how accuracy, as well as clear and concise language, is vital to all kinds of journalistic writing as well as the critical differences between creative writing, public relations writing (PR) and journalistic writing. The subject introduces the core skill of interviewing with students provided with ample opportunity to put into practice what is covered in both lectures and classes. The subject also looks at professional codes of ethics and editorial policies as well as current media law and how it directly impacts on journalists. On completion of this subject students should have a strong grasp of current journalistic practice and required skills.
Assessment:	Two news stories of 300-400 words each; 30% (first one due 23rd March, second one due 11th April); a short feature story of 800-1000 words 20% (due 4th May); a long feature story of 1500-1700 words 30% (due 25th May); a report of 500 words 10% (due 1st June) and class participation including tutorial exercises and quizzes 10%.
