Subject Overview:	This subject studies liberal and critical theories of political economy. It focuses on the roles and institutions of government and markets. how these have been defined traditionally and have been changing over time. Select current issues and debates are included to illustrate the complex interdependencies of government and business in modern liberal democracies like that of Australia. These will include globalization, deregulation and privatization, public-private partnerships, competition policy and corporate social responsibility. Students who complete this subject should have an understanding of key theoretical contemporary aspects of political economy that inform current developments in, and debates about business and government.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"># have an understanding of liberal and critical theories of political economy that are relevant for understanding Australian history and practice.# be familiar with the Australian political economy tradition and current debates over the roles of government and the market.# have studied some of the major issues of public policy and economic management facing Australia today.# have the skills to critically evaluate proposals for restructuring government and adopting market solutions for public purposes.
