Subject Overview:	A study of the ways in which gender and sexual difference have been represented in the making and composing of art music. Beginning with medieval women, this subject explores the social and cultural context of women composers and performers from Hildegard to Clara Schumann and Ethel Smyth through to contemporary composers such as Kaija Saariaho, as well as ideas of the "angel in the house" and the New Woman. It problematises women's bodies, women's voices and women's place in society, examining music by and about women as well as representations of women's music in art, literature and film.
Objectives:	On completion of this subject, students should have a detailed knowledge of women composers and musicians and their achievements and an understanding of the application of feminist theories to studies in music.
Assessment:	Four short seminar reports (40%); an essay of 2500 words (60%).
Prescribed Texts:	A book of readings will be available from the Melbourne University Bookshop before the start of semester.
