Subject Overview:	This intensive subject examines ancient Greek and Roman societies and cities in Greece, Turkey* and Italy. We will be based in: Athens, with day trips to Delphi and the Sounion peninsular, Hellenistic sites on the west coast of Turkey and Rome, with day trips to Ostia and Pompeii. Visits to sites and museums will be based around issues that contribute to a concept of the physical, economic, political and cultural evolution of ancient cities, and social life in these cities. Students should develop a familiarity with themes such as the origins of cities, the city as a physical site, the city as seat of rank, authority and power. the economy and the marketplace, religion and myth, the individual in society, citizenship, the family, the individual and the state, work, sport, leisure and entertainment, and gender and sexuality. * Subject to approval by Department of Foreign Affairs & Trade, and the University of Melbourne
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # be able to demonstrate a general knowledge of the theoretical and historical evolution of organic and inorganic cities in ancient Greek and Roman societies. # understand the process of construction and maintenance of urban landscapes and their relationship to civic and individual identity and culture through architectural, iconographic and literary evidence. # be familiar with issues surrounding the political, economic, social and religious practices of ancient Graeco-Roman cities and their location within the human environment.
