Subject Overview:	This subject is a core element of the JD degree. It provides students in their final year with a capstone supervised research experience. It does so through supervised research seminars or structured projects, generally offered in a small group setting. Students will have the opportunity to work closely with a member of the academic staff in pursuing a particular research interest. In each semester, a range of seminars and projects will be offered. Some may have special entry requirements and enrolment limits. Each seminar or project will include a research skills component and seminar or project-based supervision on a legal issue.
Learning Outcomes:	The subject involves study of a selected area of law at an advanced level; the subject requires the student to engage in self-directed research, under the supervision of a member of staff with expertise in the student's field of inquiry, and/or the methodology they have chosen to use. Students who successfully complete this subject will have demonstrated: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Creativity and originality in identifying, framing and developing their own sophisticated and relevant research question; # A rigorous and effective methodological approach to planning, researching and executing a substantial and innovative research-based project; # A deep and integrated knowledge and understanding of the research project area including its connection with its broader contexts; # Sophisticated interpretation and integration of relevant material from a full range of primary and secondary sources; # Critical analysis and argument that demonstrates substantial originality, creativity and insight into the research subject area; # A capacity to communicate the research thesis clearly, persuasively and succinctly in an oral presentation; # A capacity to reflect upon and engage with feedback from an oral presentation of their research thesis and other feedback from the supervisor; # Sophisticated, appropriate, effective and persuasive written communication skills, demonstrated in developing, structuring, editing, presenting and referencing relevant analysis, argument and conclusions on the research project, in a format appropriate for publication; and # A high level of personal autonomy and accountability in developing and executing the substantial research project.
Assessment:	Class or project participation evidenced by oral presentation (hurdle); 8,000-word written research work project or equivalent (100%).
