Subject Overview:	Health inequalities represent the most enduring and consequential global health challenge of our time. A child born in sub-Saharan Africa, for example, will live on average nearly 30 years less than a child born in Australia. This subject provides students with a firm understanding of the role of international law in promoting, or harming, human health. It covers 'hard' law such as the Framework Convention on Tobacco Control, as well as 'soft law' such as the World Health Organisation (WHO) Code of Practice on the Health Worker Recruitment. The lecturer brings into the discussion multiple international fields that powerfully affect health, such as trade, agriculture and climate change. The central theme running throughout the discussions will be global health justice. The subject uses innovative teaching tools to highly engage students, including case studies and real-life simulations.
	This subject will provide students with an in-depth understanding of global health law through careful examination of the major contemporary problems in global health, the principal international legal instruments governing global health and the principal international organisations and innovative solutions for global health governance in the 21st century. It will cover naturally occurring infectious diseases (e.g. extensively drug-resistant tuberculosis, malaria and HIV/AIDS), past (e.g. SARS) and future (e.g. influenza (A) H5N1) epidemics,
