Course Overview:
The major focus of the GRADUATE DIPLOMA IN VOICE STUDIES is to extend the understanding of voice pedagogy and skills through experiential teaching and learning and to apply this to the discipline of performing arts and the students’ own professional contexts. The course provides extensive skills and knowledge in the practice and implementation of vocal pedagogical skills to a professional standard and develops the students’ ability to acquire effective diagnostic skills of their own voice and the capacity to transfer and implement these skills in a professional context. The Graduate Diploma has a strong emphasis on developing the students’ ability to implement an approach to working with the relationship between voice, speech and text which demonstrates the underlying pedagogical principles of voice and speech. Students will have a thorough understanding of the relationship between the actor’s voice and contemporary and classical texts and be equipped to work across a variety of professional performance contexts and settings. Entry to this course is upon completion of the Graduate Certificate in Voice Studies or equivalent professional experience.

Learning Outcomes:
The Graduate Diploma in Voice Studies is designed to provide a deepening of knowledge and skills in the application of voice and speech techniques to the discipline of performing arts and to the students’ own professional contexts. Students completing the Graduate Diploma in Voice Studies will:

- have deepened and broadened their skills in the application of voice, speech, language and text in preparation for rehearsal and production in schools, community and professional settings or in their own professional context;
- have critically examined a range of contemporary voice and speech methodologies to be developed and applied in a professional context;
- have developed, practised and implemented vocal pedagogical skills to a professional standard;
- have developed an understanding of the relationship between the actor’s voice and contemporary and classical texts;
- have developed a thorough understanding of their own voice and speech;
- have developed and implemented effective diagnostic tools for addressing idiosyncratic habits and enhancing voice practice with individuals and groups;
- have developed and implemented an approach to working with the relationship between voice, speech and text which demonstrates the underlying pedagogical principles of voice and speech teaching;
- have developed their cognitive understanding of the anatomy of the voice as it relates to practical problem-solving solutions with groups and individuals; and
- have developed a critical and analytical approach to the major international voice and speech teachers’ pedagogies.
