Course Overview:	The Master of Translation prepares the highly skilled professionals who will mediate Australia's international relations over the coming decades. Initially focussed on China, the Master of Translation is aimed at Chinese-English bilinguals who intend to work as professional translators or in professional roles that demand high level translation and inter-cultural skills. Graduates may work in fields such as government, commerce, law, international relations, or specialized technical areas. The Master of Translation is notable for its access to the intellectua resources of Australia's No.1 university, and in particular the Asia Institute. The Master of Translation focusses on written translation between English and Chinese and vice-versa. Participants will develop professional competence in translating specialised topics, managing terminology, using translation technologies, and negotiating the cultural and intellectual boundaries of the Chinese- and English-speaking worlds. Practical learning is underpinned by study of theories of translation. Preparation for professional practice is provided by an internship. Study methods include intensive small group sessions, autonomous study through learning technologies, and placement in a professional translation environment.
	It is planned that the course will be further developed to offer other Asian and European language combinations.
	The 150-point Master of Translation includes the option to choose one or two electives from the broad field of culture and communication, allowing participants to strengthen their foundation knowledge and skills.
	This course is approved by the National Accreditation Authority for Translators and Interpreters Ltd (NAATI).
Learning Outcomes:	Students who complete this course should be able to: # successfully translate text, taking into consideration major the theories underpinning the practice of Translation; # to successfully apply strategies for translating different types of text, varying in register, style and domain; # critically understand the cultural and intellectual foundations of the English- and Chinese- speaking worlds; # utilise the range of technologies used in translation;
