Subject Overview:	This subject introduces students to the ways in which individual and social identities are fashioned in literary texts. It will work with three different historical periods and three different literary genres in order to investigate how specific social and cultural contexts inform the development of new genres and new modes of subjectivity. Working at the intersections of text, genre and culture, we will examine changing models of self and society from the early modern period to the late nineteenth century in England. Shakespearean and Jacobean tragedy develops highly influential modern forms of subjectivity, which see the individual emerge from social distinctions of status and gender and through new forms of representation. The Romantic lyric is designed to produce a revolutionary individuality from the poetically renewed resources of a common language. The mid-nineteenth century realist novel perfects both a new form of writing and a new mode of subjectivity out of the materials of its dramatic and poetic predecessors. Along with historical and generic concepts, we will also examine the constitutive role of ideas of power, performance and textuality in the processes of self-fashioning. Students who successfully complete this subject will have a detailed understanding of the themes and forms of a range of key texts, and a methodological introduction to further work in English Literary Studies.
Assessment:	A text-based exercise of 800 words worth 20% (due early in semester), an essay of 1200 words worth 30% (due mid-semester) and an essay of 2000 words worth 50% (due in the examination period).Note: Assessment submitted late without an approved formal extension will be penalised at 2% per day.
