Subject Overview:	This studio concentrates on managing change to landscapes that are the repository of cultural representation and values. The issues of landscape preservation, conservation, adaptation and more radical change are explored through the medium of a site or broader landscape that faces change in the context of conflicting values and tensions. Methods are introduced that assist students to understand and analyse values and position design propositions within the overall operating domain. Students are expected to develop skills in articulating design propositions within that complex context. This subject aims to develop awareness of: the relationship between the designed landscape and change through time; the social and governmental mechanisms that protect landscape values; and, the capacity to make reasoned and defensible design propositions within that complex context. Landscape is posited as a cultural product of relative and dynamic values that can be mediated through design actions and institutional structures.
