Subject Overview:	This subject examines contemporary debates in political and social theory with a particular focus on developments within and challenges to liberal democracy. Initially the difficulties of liberalism in the face of social change will be analysed in the light of theories of postmodernism, postindustrialism and McDonaldisation. From this basis recent theories of democratic renewal are discussed including those concerned with the 'Third Way', social capital and civil society. Alternative theories of political renewal in complex, pluralistic societies will then be examined focusing in particular on the way that they understand violence, disagreement and incivility. The subject concludes by evaluating recent radical democratic theories which are concerned with establishing a new ethical framework through which we can rethink political disagreement.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># understand the major challenges to liberal democracy in contemporary political theory;</li> <li># be able to explain the implications for political theory of recent social and cultural phenomena such as postmodernism and McDonaldisation;</li> <li># grasp theories of democratic renewal such as those associated with risk society, the Third Way and social capital;</li> <li># be able to articulate the reasons why there has been a shift towards deliberative politics in recent theory;</li> <li># understand the relationship between civility and incivility and their implications for understanding democracy;</li> <li># comprehend the growth of pluralistic interpretations of complex societies in relation to political conflict and disagreement;</li> <li># be able to explain the reasons behind the emergence of radical theories of democracy and their implications for political ethics.</li> </ul>
