Subject Overview:	This subject examines the history and representation of Roman emperors often represented as insane or psychopathically tyrannical. During the first three centuries of the Imperial period, major historical sources, such as Tacitus' Annals and Suetonius' Lives of the Caesars, depict the Roman imperial court as a place of intrigue, scandal and corruption, while the actions of the emperor himself are often represented as arbitrary and incomprehensible. This course investigates the prevailing themes of madness and despotism, and considers the reasons why such hostile sources might be generated. The changing relationship between emperor, court and political elites, as well as the agendas of writers of history and other genres, are central to providing an understanding of these issues. Hostile sources are compared with instances of self-presentation, particularly through material culture and official documents. Chief attention is given to the emperors Caligula, Nero, Domitian, Commodus and Elagabalus, whose reputations for irrationality and psychopathic or savage behaviour are most marked in the historical tradition, both ancient and modern. The continuity and development of these narratives is discernible in historical fiction, cinema and television, and representations such as those found in I, Claudius, Quo Vadis and Gladiator are studied in relation to the reception of Roman imperial culture.
