Subject Overview:	This intensive four-week study abroad subject will be taught in Venice between the end of November and December 2009 and begins with an overview of the history of the language with a focus on the linguistic situation in Roman Italy, the fragmentation of Latin and the development of vernaculars from the Middle Ages to the Renaissance. Some aspects of palaeography (the art of analysing and reading handwriting) will be studied. Field trips to the Marciana Library and the Museo Correr will provide students with basic knowledge of codicology (study of manuscripts) and the basic skills needed to work on fifteenth century primary sources. On completion of this subject, student should have acquired an understanding of the history of the Italian language and of the emergence of a Tuscan lingua franca of the Italian and European Renaissance. Students will also be able to gain a basic knowledge of the language and text production of the Italian Renaissance.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # gain an understanding of the development of Italian vernaculars before and during the Renaissance # acquire skills in reading and studying fifteenth century primary sources # locate and analyse a range of literary and visual materials available only in Italian libraries # acquire skills needed to be able to carry out research in Italian libraries # gain public speaking confidence in an unfamiliar cultural and linguistic setting
