Subject Overview:	Teacher candidates engage with research-based multi-media case studies of the diverse roles and contexts of the early childhood professional using critical discourse analysis. The case studies focus on the effects of the systemic dimensions of the profession (e.g. regulations, governance, code of ethics, rights of the child, sources of funding, marketing and policy development) for professional discourses, practices and possibilities. International selection of the case studies highlight different approaches to the governance of early childhood services, expose students to contemporary policy debates, and support them as global citizens to evaluate how best to take an ethical and socially just professional stance on those debated within their own local context. The principles of critical discourse analysis are applied to extend on and deepen key dimensions of being critically reflective professionals. To gain skills in working within a community of practice and researching, analysing and taking a stance within professional debates, students work in small case teams to develop a research-based advocacy case study that examines a contemporary debate (e.g. the effects of increasing corporatism, regulation and professionalism on teacher autonomy) and how it is shaping professional discourses, possibilities, constraints and dilemmas.
Objectives:	On completion of this subject teacher candidates will be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># Examine the changing role of early childhood professional as an advocate for children's rights and social justice for diverse families in diverse contexts.</li> <li># Consolidate their skills as critically reflective professionals capable of creating and sustaining ethical and socially just communities of practice to enhance children's learning and well-being.</li> <li># Investigate contemporary professional debates (e.g. around the privatisation of early education or the development of nationally mandated curriculum) and articulate a research-based and ethical position on those debates and their implications for socially just teaching and learning in early childhood.</li> <li># Explore, contrast and critique Australian and International research related to early childhood policy development and guidelines for quality teaching and learning.</li> <li># Develop in-depth knowledge about the diverse administrative skills and reporting requirements required to work in a range of positions within a multi-disciplinary and culturally diverse early childhood field.</li> </ul>
