Subject Overview:	Recent decades have seen a number of international and inter-regional initiatives aimed at nation-building, peacemaking, peacekeeping and the reconstruction of systems of law and justice in states emerging from colonial rule or de-federation, and/or under stress from internal conflict, adverse economic and environmental conditions or other debilitating factors. This subject provides a critical examination of the role of criminal justice reform within these broader initiatives. The subject examines efforts to reconstruct systems of law enforcement, adjudication and punishment, and assesses the nature and extent of criminological contributions to these efforts. Topics selected for detailed scrutiny will be drawn from a list which includes: the foundations and effectiveness of transformative justice programs; criminology and the idea of state modernisation; indigenous forms of conflict resolution and experiences with their integration into 'mainstream' criminal justice systems; RAMSI (Regional Assistance Mission to the Solomon Islands); policing and other justice reforms in post-Apartheid South Africa, Northern Ireland, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Haiti, East Timor or Papua New Guinea; the role of the United Nations in global and regional criminal justice through such structures as the Peacebuilding Commission and the UN Office of Drugs and Crime; and international criminal justice anti-corruption programs.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># To develop a broad understanding of the reasons for and practices of attempts to reconstruct systems of justice across the globe.</li> <li># To examine in detail examples of justice reconstruction programs drawn from near-neighbour, regional and other environments.</li> <li># To interrogate the strengths and weaknesses of reconstruction rationale and practice.</li> <li># To examine critically criminological contributions to reconstruction.</li> </ul>
