Subject Overview:	Criminology draws its frameworks for inquiry and understanding from a wide-range of intellectual traditions and contemporary conceptualisations. This subject provides accounts of contemporary developments in the construction and application of theory in criminal justice and related settings. It is axiomatic that practice in criminal justice ought to be founded on strong theoretical grounds, but this often is not the case. Drawing upon a range of enduring and emerging formulations, the subject explains and tests the relationships between theory and practice in criminal justice. Topics to be covered are drawn from a list which includes restorative justice, offender rehabilitation and desistance, developmental crime prevention, surveillance and control, community and intersectoral policing developments, risk prediction and offender classification, and anti-social behaviour orders.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># To comprehend the sources and varieties of theory formation of relevance to criminological inquiry.</li> <li># to develop a sophisticated understanding of the relationships between theory construction, research and criminal justice practices.</li> <li># to explore in detail topical criminal justice practices and interventions in the context of their underlying theoretical and research foundations.</li> <li># to be able to analyse and articulate critically the nexus between theory, research and practice in criminal justice across a wide range of settings.</li> </ul>
Assessment:	Written work totalling 5000 words, comprising a 1500 word essay (30%) due mid-semester and a 3500 word research essay (70%) due during the examination period.
