Subject Overview:	This subject offers an advanced exploration of methods of teaching history in secondary schools. Drawing on research on the diversity of secondary students' learning needs and research on effective assessment, teacher candidates will explore how to personalise the learning experience of each student within this discipline area. The course encourages teacher candidates to deepen their pedagogical content knowledge and explore practical teaching strategies in the context of rich theoretical frameworks. This subject examines the relationship between historical knowledge and participatory citizenship. In addition, teacher candidates are required to critically evaluate their teaching practice as they examine the course design choices that teachers make when they build disciplinary and interdisciplinary programs. Key topics include: interdisciplinary programs, curriculum management, learning pathways and assessment from the perspective of discipline-based pedagogy. Reflection on the relationship between historiography and curriculum studies is a key aspect of the course along with an analysis of the concept of historical imagination. The production of a portfolio is central to the development of knowledge and understanding of critical theories and approaches to the humanities. Teacher candidates will undertake a study of a chosen aspect of history education with this task emphasising research and collegiality.
