Subject Overview:	This is the newest subject in the diversification of study of dispute resolution and conflict resolution processes. Beyond looking at two-party or multi-party negotiation, mediation and arbitration, Dispute System Design is the study of how to structure appropriate dispute processes when disputes are recurrent, as in employment, government dealings with citizens and business dealings between customers and vendors or suppliers. Recent civil reforms are requiring legal advisers to have an increasingly sophisticated understanding of the wide range of processes and strategies available to manage disputes to be able to advise clients about them, which this subject will help provide. Principal topics will include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Developing dispute system protocols # Knowledge of different methods of dispute resolution # Creation of process pluralism-menus and choices # Skills in planning, communication, facilitating and negotiating.
Objectives:	A student who has successfully completed this subject should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Be able to assist clients in planning and choosing dispute processes # Understand the variety of processes available for disputes and grievances in organisations and institutions, whether public or private.
