Subject Overview:	Criminal law has a central importance in criminology, since it is the criminal law which determines the legality or illegality of behaviours. This subject studies social and political dimensions of the criminal law as it governs institutional processes and the construction of criminality. The first section of the course covers differences in the ways that criminal law and criminology construct social issues as crime, with particular emphasis on the legal processes of criminal justice. The next three sections provide substantive examinations of different aspects of the social and political dimensions of criminal law with particular emphasis on topical areas currently subject to contestation and change: the regulation of public space; the media as an aspect of the construction of crime and as a problem to be regulated; and the role of law in political conflict and post-atrocity situations.
Objectives:	On completion of this subject, students should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # be familiar with the processes and categories of criminal law. # be able to describe and analyse some ways of regulating crime through criminal law. # understand the political and social dimensions of the institutions and practices of criminal law. # be able to explain the role and construction of gender, sexual orientation and ethnicity in the criminal law.
Assessment:	Two essays of 2000 words (50% each), one due mid-semester, and one due during the examination period. This subject has a minimum Hurdle Requirement of 75% Tutorial attendance. Students who fail to meet this hurdle requirement will be deemed ineligible to submit the final piece of assessment or sit the final examination. Regular participation in tutorials is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
Prescribed Texts:	A subject reader will be available for purchase from the University Bookshop.
