Subject Overview:	Rebels and revolutionaries make history. How do they do so? And with what consequences? This unit surveys the modern history of rebellion over more than 200 years. It is structured around the career of significant rebels, from Lenin to Gandhi, from the Suffragettes to Julian Assange. Attention is directed to three major issues: the historical context that incites rebellion; the political techniques rebels adopt and perfect; and the influence of rebels on later struggles. Because the course is organised chronologically, students engage not only with individual struggles, but also learn about the changing forms of political action over time.
Objectives:	On completion of the subject, students should <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # have a detailed knowledge of the history of modern political rebellion # have an understanding of the context that incites rebellion, of the changing techniques developed by rebels, and of the influence of earlier struggles on later movements # understand the views and actions of those who lived in earlier times # develop an aptitude in building historical explanations # develop the ability to use historical knowledge to illuminate the conflicts and possibilities of the present
Assessment:	Research Essay (2,500 words, due mid semester) (55%). Reflective Essay (1,500 words, due at end of semester) (35%). Tutorial Participation and Presentation (10%).
