Subject Overview:	Since 11 September 2001, there has been a universal trend towards new laws and new measures against terrorism. Also, international organisations, including the United Nations, have adopted new instruments against international terrorism, including conventions, protocols and resolutions. Many of the resulting counter-terrorism measures have an impact upon the enjoyment of human rights, sometimes within the scope of permissible limitations but often also resulting in clear human rights violations. This subject addresses the international law framework for countering terrorism and provides a stock-taking and assessment of the human rights implications. Principal topics will include: # Terrorism and international law # Do terrorists violate human rights, and can they be held accountable? # Which human rights are affected by counter-terrorism measures by states and how they are affected

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Is the prohibition against torture absolute? # Treatment, detention and trial of terrorism suspects # Freedom of expression, association and assembly # Terrorist listing and sanctions against individuals and entities # 'Profiling' as a method to identify potential terrorists # Refugee and immigration law in the era of terrorism # The erosion of the right to privacy in the name of countering terrorism # Strategic approaches to preventing and combating terrorism # Human rights after the 'long decade' since 9/11 of 2001 # A human rights assessment of the counter-terrorism measures of a particular country.
Objectives:	A student who has successfully completed this subject should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Understand the international law framework for countering terrorism # Comprehend and be able to apply a human rights assessment of counter-terrorism measures by states # Be able to independently follow up developments in the field.
