Subject Overview:	This is an introductory subject designed to enable students to acquire the basic tools necessary for critically READING about and carrying out quantitative empirical research in applied linguistics. Students will be given practice in the application of statistics in the analysis of data obtained from research and will be introduced to the use of computers with statistical packages to analyse data. Throughout, there will be a focus on the practicality and usefulness of the skills developed for the tasks of understanding research literature in applied linguistics, and of carrying out research in settings relevant to students. No prior knowledge of mathematics or of statistical procedures will be assumed.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># be able to read research in applied linguistics critically and with understanding, including research which involves quantitative analysis of data.</li> <li># design, conduct and analyse data from a small scale research project relevant to their professional interests.</li> <li># develop skills in the use of statistical packages on the computer.</li> </ul>
Assessment:	6 homework assignments (30%) due over the course of the semester. a take-home examination(30%) due in the final week of semester. a 2000 word paper (40%) due two weeks after the end of the semester.
