Subject Overview:	This subject examines the role of communication systems in the constitution of contemporary political and social life. It pays particular attention to the new modes and means of political communication given the developments in information technologies and global reach. It introduces students to a number of different approaches to the understanding and analysis of political communication in the information age. The subject explores substantive topics such as civic malaise, political marketing, infotainment, political scandal, and media democracy. On completion of this subject, students should have an understanding of a number of the key configurations of contemporary political communication.
Objectives:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># have an informed appreciation of the role of communication in contemporary political and social life.</li> <li># have acquired a critical understanding of communication systems in the constitution of social worlds and political action.</li> <li># have an awareness of differing approaches to the study of political communication.</li> <li># have developed basic analytical skills to evaluate these differing approaches.</li> <li># be prepared for further studies in political and social inquiry.</li> </ul>
