Subject Overview:	This subject offers an opportunity to critically consider the place of older adults in contemporary societies and in social policy. We will examine together how adulthood, from midlife on into deep old age, is socially constructed and the ways in which particular aspects of adult ageing are emphasised in the policy arena. To this end, the subject involves three elements: Firstly, an introduction to key concepts and theories that can be used to understand adult ageing. Secondly, an examination of social problems associated with later life. Thirdly, some of the policy approaches aimed to address problems as identified. Students will be encouraged to reflectively examine their own experience, national policy frameworks and professional practice as part of this process
Objectives:	By the end of the subject students should be able to appreciate and understand: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># the different ways in which adult ageing is socially constructed</li> <li># how to apply concepts from social gerontology to a variety of policy settings</li> <li># the influence of adult ageing on personal identities</li> <li># the influence of adult ageing on intergenerational relationships</li> <li># the relationship between social structures, cultures and ageing</li> </ul>

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># the problems of ageing societies and their relevance to the helping professions</li> <li># a broadened understanding of the influences affecting national and international policy on ageing.</li> </ul>
Assessment:	1. A Report of 2,500 words: Evaluation of the 'age-friendliness' of one area of public space, supported by the relevant academic literature, worth 50% Due Monday 16 April 2012.2.
