Subject Overview:	Ethnicity and nationalism are of special concern to anthropologists, especially in instances where anthropology becomes part of nationalist discourse. This subject considers ethnicity and nationalism through the in-depth analysis of a case study from the developing world, but draws on comparative material from Africa, the Americas, Asia, Australia, Europe and the Pacific. Students will examine different theoretical approaches to ethnicity, nationalism and ethnic nationalism, in particular the relationships between the formation of nation states and processes of 'development', 'transition' and 'underdevelopment'; the roles of actors, from political actors to ordinary people, in the construction of national projects; the relationships between historic and contemporary processes in the construction of national projects; how national projects are constructed, enforced and culturally maintained and the relationships between globalisation, migration, transnationalism and ethnic nationalism in the modern world.
Objectives:	Students who successfully complete this subject will: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # show an understanding of core theoretical approaches to the understanding of ethnicity, nationalism and ethnic nationalism; # an ability to apply and critically assess theories of ethnicity, nationalism and ethnic nationalism in relation to empirical case studies; # an understanding of the relationships between the formation of nation states and processes of development, transition and underdevelopment; # an understanding of the respective roles of different actors, from political actors to ordinary people, in the construction of national projects; # an understanding of the relationships between historic and contemporary processes in the construction of national projects;

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # an understanding of how national projects are constructed, enforced and culturally maintained; # an understanding of the relationships between globalization, migration, trans-nationalism and ethnic nationalism in the modern world; # an ability to identify and critically assess the implicitly ethnic nationalist content in anthropological and other social scientific writing.
Assessment:	A 2000 word essay (50%) due mid-semester, and a 2000 word essay (50%) due during the examination period. Hurdle Requirement: This subject has a minimum hurdle requirement of 75% tutorial attendance. Regular participation in tutorials is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
