Subject Overview:	This unit develops understandings of the intentions and principles of curriculum and investigates specifics of curriculum design and implementation to improve and refine curriculum. The focus of this unit will centre on curriculum design and evaluation principles, as well as providing the tools for students to analyse and critique curriculum principles, policies and practices. This subject also creates opportunities for students to focus on a negotiated area of curriculum. For example: curriculum structures; new learning theories about ways of knowing and implications for curriculum; transition stages within schooling; innovative learning technologies; gender; indigenous studies; multiculturalism and Australia's role in a global environment; sustainability and environmental issues and/or another curriculum dimension that is of concern to the student within their own context. Students will explore their negotiated focus through presentation and assignment work.
Objectives:	# Demonstrate an understanding of the principles behind curriculum design and evaluation; # Transfer general principles and knowledge into a specific context.
Assessment:	A linked presentation and written assignment on a negotiated element of curriculum design, implementation and evaluation. The individual presentation is to be 20 minutes in length (2,000 words equivalent) and the follow up paper 3,000 words. 100 per cent, with written assignment due at the end of semester
