Subject Overview:	Mineral resources have shaped Australia's history, economy, society and environment for more than 150 years, and continue to do so. The exploitation of these resources involves governments, as proprietors and regulators, together with private enterprise, as explorers and developers. The complex relationship between governments and private enterprise provides the central theme of the subject. Australia's federal system of government adds to the complexity of that relationship. The subject begins by identifying fundamental legal principles of mineral exploration and production that transcend jurisdictional boundaries. It then examines the application of these principles in statutory title regimes in selected Australian jurisdictions. The Australian approach to these matters is considered in the international context of foreign mineral regimes. Principal topics will include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Foundations of mineral law # Property in minerals # Statutory titles # Security of title # Trespass and disclosure

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Dealings and registration # Government royalties # Private royalties # Access to land # State agreements # Uranium # Foreign regimes # Case study 1: Mineral Resources (Sustainable Development) Act 1990 (Vic) # Case study 2: Mining Act 1971 (SA) # Case study 3: Mineral Resources Act 1989 (Qld).
Objectives:	A student who has successfully completed this subject should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Understand the law relating to mineral exploration and production in Australia # Be familiar with the statutory regimes governing mineral exploration and production in selected Australian jurisdictions # Be able to apply the relevant law to problems arising in relation to mineral exploration and production in Australia # Understand the law relating to mineral exploration and production in selected foreign jurisdictions.
