Subject Overview:	The recent spectacular 'rise of China' as an economic and regional power has been accompanied by both major legal change and increased foreign investment. China now exerts significant global influence and is subject itself to the profound influences of globalisation. Despite this, China's legal system remains unique, particularly as regards its law-making process, its judicial system and the operation of government, all of which reflect the specific local context in which they developed. Taught by an expert in Chinese law, this subject offers insights into law reform in the country that will determine the path of the 'Asian century'. It focuses on Chinese legal institutions from the centre to the regions; criminal law and human rights issues; and economic reform and the regulation of foreign investment. Principal topics will include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Brief introduction to Chinese legal history # Institutions of the Chinese legal system (courts, legislatures, government agencies, central and local governments, lawyers) # Law and economic reform # Criminal law and human rights issues # Constitutional issues # Dispute resolution – formal and informal

	# Undertaking research in Chinese law.
Objectives:	A student who has successfully completed this subject should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Be familiar with the nature of the Chinese legal system, including the distinct nature of Chinese law-making, judicial processes and governmental operation # Understand the interaction between law and the economic reform process in China, including its impact on foreign investment # Be able to conduct research on Chinese legal questions in a manner which reflects awareness of the specific context of Chinese law # Be able to analyse critically claims about the operation of the Chinese legal system.
