Subject Overview:	This subject explores the theories of meaning and interpretation developed in contemporary European thought. We will examine questions such as: How do we make sense of texts from other cultures and times? What is it to interpret a text? Is the meaning of a text determined by the author's intentions? Does what we write or say have a single determinate meaning or can conflicting interpretations be equally valid? Major thinkers discussed will be chosen from Heidegger, Gadamer, Habermas, Ricoeur, Derrida, Butler and Benjamin. On completion of this subject students should have broad grasp of a variety of competing theories and understand what would be involved in applying them to a critical reading of texts. They should also have a greater awareness of the assumptions that are reinforced or challenged by different reading practices.
Objectives:	Students who successfully complete this subject will: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # have a general knowledge of some central themes in contemporary European philosophy. # understand how those themes arose from and critically relate to earlier philosophical theories. # be able to apply the methods and theses advanced in contemporary European philosophical texts to current issues and problems. # be able to clearly explicate and explain the central themes and theses discussed in the subject. # demonstrate an ability to critically examine philosophical arguments and theses. # acquire an ability to uncover the presuppositions at work in a text. # acquire an appreciation of the factors which govern interpretations of a text.
Assessment:	A written assignment of 2000 words 50% (due mid-semester), a take-home written examination of 2000 words 50% (due during the first week of the end of semester examination period). This subject has a minimum hurdle requirement of 75% tutorial attendance. Regular participation in tutorials is required.
