Subject Overview:	This subject focuses on one of the great systematic works of 17th and 18th century European philosophy, such as Spinoza's Ethics, Leibniz's New Essays on Human Understanding, Hume's Treatise of Human Nature, or Kant's Critique of Pure Reason. Our approach will be both philosophical and interpretive: our chief aim will be to understand the philosophical motivations the thinker had, and to assess them. We will use comparisons to contemporary philosophy whenever helpful. All the major areas of philosophy will be involved to some degree.
Objectives:	Students who successfully complete this subject will develop: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # a thorough understanding of one of the systematic philosophies of the early modern period # a more general appreciation of alternative approaches to philosophical problems -the skills of close reading and charitable interpretation.
Assessment:	A 5000-word research essay 100% (due at the end of semester). Hurdle Requirement: Students are required to attend a minimum of 75% of classes in order to pass this subject. Regular participation in class is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 2% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
Prescribed Texts:	All texts will be available online, a list of acceptable published versions will also be made available.
Breadth Options:	This subject is not available as a breadth subject.
