Subject Overview:	This subject will give students an understanding of the theory and practice of selected methods of social research. Specifically, the subject is focussed on students gaining practical skills in selected research methods and an understanding of the strengths, limitations and appropriate uses of each method. The subject is intended for students who will be developing and carrying out their own research project as part of their course of study. Students will be taught how to develop their own research proposals, using appropriate methodological approaches, which can be used for their research thesis. Teaching will concentrate on practical skills related to various social sciences research methods, and critical analysis and evaluation of research proposals. As part of this subject, students will be expected to participate in (a) non-assessed practice exercises designed to enhance skills and techniques; and (b) workshopping, analysis and criticism of each others' research proposals, providing feedback in the refinement of the research design and methodology.
Objectives:	Upon completion of this subject, students should be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># Undertake commonly-used social sciences research techniques</li> <li># Evaluate the advantages and limitations of a variety of social science research methods</li> <li># Understand the relationship between research design and research methods</li> <li># Justify the choice of research methods for a particular research question to be used for their research project</li> <li># Apply problem solving skills to deal with practical issues that arise when conducting social research</li> <li># Conduct a critical review of the literature for the purpose of designing social sciences research</li> </ul>

	# Develop a detailed proposal for their research project.
