Subject Overview:	This subject considers the mutually enforcing role of socio-cultural theory and ethnography in understandings of the contemporary human endeavour. Particular emphasis is placed on both classic and modern theories of personhood, social identity and relatedness in social anthropology and their relevance for understanding a range of contemporary social issues relating to kinship, migration, travel and tourism, nationalism, modernity, ageing and the life course and digital technologies. On completion students taking this course should have gained an appreciation of anthropological approaches to the study of the person and their relevance to a range of political, ethical, economic and cultural concerns about fetal rights, child soldiers, migrant workers, backpacking, love marriages, retirement and virtual explorations of the self.
Learning Outcomes:	Students who successfully complete this subject will: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Develop a critical awareness of the contemporary relevance and application of both classic and modern theories in social anthropology; # Appreciate how a comparative perspective and a tradition of empirical enquiry can inform developments in theory; # Engage with theories located in specific times and places and apply them to a range of ethnographic case studies located in national and transnational social spaces; # Gain an appreciation of the links that exist between anthropological approaches to the study of the person and their relevance to a range of political, ethical, economic and cultural concerns in the world today.
Assessment:	A research essay of 2000 words (50%) due mid-semester, and a research essay of 2000 words (50%) due during the examination period. Hurdle Requirement: This subject has a minimum hurdle requirement of 75% tutorial attendance. Regular participation in tutorials is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.

Prescribed Texts:	A reading pack will be available for purchase from the University Bookshop
