Subject Overview:	Growing numbers of political anthropologists are committed to exploring the ideological, cultural, and social means by which systems of inequality are created, sustained, misrecognized, and transformed by increasingly powerful resistance movements. Drawing principally on Marxist anthropology, political ecology, post-structuralism, and post-colonialism, this subject looks cross-culturally to explore the interrelationships between diverse forms and sources of power, the roles of colonialism and corporate globalization in configuring and sustaining local relations of inequality, and the rise of resistance movements that explicitly challenge exclusions based on class, gender, and ethnicity. Special attention will be paid to the effects of multinational corporations (via brand marketing, legal reform, and corporate social responsibility) on local power relations and patterns of inequality throughout the world. Case studies will be drawn from Latin America, Africa, indigenous Australia, East Asia, and Melanesia.
Learning Outcomes:	Students who successfully complete this subject will: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Have a thorough understanding of the way in which anthropologists have approached political organisation in non-western societies

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Have critically and comparatively examined anthropological theories about the persistence of 'inequality' in a range of communities from Latin America to Melanesia # Have acquired knowledge of the interplay between domination and resistance in the context of colonial and post-colonial states # Have an appreciation of the ways in which the practices of multinational corporations are shifting local power relations and reconfiguring patterns of domination in the contemporary world
