Subject Overview:	This subject maps the intertwined (and sometimes antagonistic) trajectories of Romanticism and early Feminism, as they emerge in Britain in the wake of the American and French Revolutions. Drawing on prose, poetry and drama from this period (including texts by Wollstonecraft, Hays, Radcliffe, Robinson, Charlotte Smith, Mary Shelley, P. B. Shelley, Keats and Emily Bronte), it studies the construction of modern notions of literature, culture, sexuality, emancipation and revolution. In so doing, the subject brings late 18th and early 19th century philosophies of imagination, reason and gender into dialogue with the emergence of market-oriented print and visual cultures. Students completing this subject should have a firm understanding of the literary, philosophical and cultural foundations of Romanticism and early Feminism, movements that have played key roles in the construction of the modern world.
Learning Outcomes:	On completion of the subject students should have: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # the ability to demonstrate a familiarity with some of the key texts, genres, assumptions, interpretative strategies and political tactics of Romanticism and early Feminism; # a broad understanding of the revolutionary social, economic and political changes that accompanied the emergence of Romanticism and early Feminism; # an overview of some of the chief exchanges between Romanticism and early Feminism; # the ability to demonstrate an awareness of recent developments in the study of Romanticism and early Feminism; # gained an overview of the roles played by Romanticism and early Feminism in the construction of the modern world; # acquired a transportable set of interpretative skills; # developed their capacity for independent research; # developed their capacity for critical thinking and analysis; # developed their ability to communicate in writing.
