Subject Overview:	This subject is an introduction to contemporary Australian politics with an emphasis on what makes Australia unique and with an assessment of how democratic institutions have developed over time. In addition to examining the formal political system, we will also be debating the role of citizenship and participation in Australian political culture. So while dealing with institution arrangements such as parliament, the executive, the bureaucracy, policy-making, federalism and the High Court, we will also look at citizens' activism, in social movements as well as in political parties, and examine key theoretical arguments and political ideologies. The subject is based on the proposition that politics is important because it is how we shape our future.
Learning Outcomes:	Students who complete this subject should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # be able to understand, explain and follow Australian Politics and develop the confidence to make informed political decisions; # have a solid understanding of the institutional structures of Australia's democracy and system of government, and of the key actors in the political process; # be aware of competing interpretations of Australia's political history, ideologies and ideas and be able to critically analyse how these shape the thinking of the key actors and inform debates; # be able to engage with contemporary political issues and debates; # be able to argue a considered position in oral and written presentations; # have developed a solid background for further studies and research in Political Science.
Assessment:	1. A draft discussion paper of 500 words (10%) due in week 4 of the semester; 2. A critical reflective essay of 2000 words (35%) which can incorporate the draft above, due in week 9 of the semester; 3. Short essays totalling 1500 words (35%) due during the examination period; 4. The remaining 20% of total marks are (provisionally) assigned to student engagement in the subject, and this involves a fourth assessment task. It consists of the student group designing and running a political exercise to make a decision on whether this 20% will, or will not, be assigned to assessment of student engagement in tutorials and in this larger decision-making process. Hurdle Requirement: This subject has a minimum Hurdle Requirement of 75% tutorial attendance. Regular participation in tutorials is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
