Subject Overview:	This subject provides students with a critical understanding of the changing concepts and practices of security in a globalised and dynamic world. The subject contrasts traditional state-centric, military based, and external-oriented national security thinking and policy with non-traditional, critical, and human security approaches. The subject explores key relationships between: the state, society and security, including in 'failed states'; international intervention and security, including the 'responsibility to protect' doctrine; weapons and security, including nuclear weapons; and considers the particular insecurities of marginalised groups, such as forcibly displaced populations. The subject then explores globalised forms of insecurity including information and cyber threats, transnational terrorism and organised crime, global health pandemics, and the nexus between climate change, natural resources, and conflict.
Learning Outcomes:	On completion of this subject students should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li># Have a political, historical and cultural understanding of both traditional and non-traditional sources of insecurity;</li> <li># Be able to evaluate national, regional, and international institutional responses to transnational security threats;</li> <li># have strengthened skills in critically analysing different security discourses, including through the 'securitisation' process;</li> <li># develop skills in analysing and evaluating contemporary security policy, and preparing policy briefings.</li> </ul>
Assessment:	2 x 1000 word briefing papers (20% each) due during the semester, and a 3000 word research essay (60%) due in the examination period. Hurdle Requirement: Students are required to attend a minimum of 75% of classes in order to qualify to have their written work assessed. Regular participation in class is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
