| Subject Overview: | It is a commonplace that we live in globalized world. But what does this mean in theory and in practice? How did we get to this point? And how do we interpret the processes that underpin our global world? This subject examines the origins of the interconnected global paradigm from its origins in the mid-fifteenth century until the present day. It explores the structural changes that have shaped our experiences of, and interactions with, the world. It brings a rich historical perspective to some of the critical debates and challenges of the modern era. |
| Learning Outcomes: | Students who complete this subject will have a nuanced and well rounded understanding of: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # the complex forces shaping our global world; # the paradigms of consumption and globalization; # east west perspectives on globalization; # the role of communication technologies in globalization, from print to social media # the role of empire and of ideologies in shaping and forming our globalized world. |
