Subject Overview:	This subject examines Islam in the West past and present. It explores how Muslims interpret and practice Islam in a culture that is secular and somewhat alien to the culture of Muslim majority countries. Students will study how Muslims in the West negotiate their beliefs on Islam, particularly within the theological and ethico-legal spheres. Part of the subject involves a case study of Muslims in Australia, which will include visits to some local Muslim institutions and interaction with Muslim communities. Students will undertake a small scale research project on Islam and Muslims in the West and present the results in writing.
Learning Outcomes:	To gain a broad understanding of the sociology of Islam and Muslim migration in Australia and the West more broadly. To be able to engage competently in discussion using a range of academic and communicative skills with peers as well as leaders from the Muslim community To be able to develop research and critical analysis skills, examining complex issues from multiple perspectives.
Assessment:	A 4,000-word major essay (due during the examination period) 90% and continuous tutorial participation 10% (throughout the semester). Class attendance is required for this subject; if you do not attend a minimum of 75% of classes without an approved exemption you will not be eligible for a pass in this subject. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
