Subject Overview:	This subject examines the diversity of musical expression that arises as a response to particular physical environments among various Indigenous societies. Using seminal ethnomusicological writings and recordings, case studies are drawn from rainforest societies in Africa, Asia, South America and Melanesia, societies on the rim of the Arctic circle, and the nomadic herder societies of the grasslands and taiga of southern Siberia and Mongolia. The subject explores how sound, speech, song and ceremony are used to reflect the social, spiritual, sensory and sonic relationships between people and nature. Students will be encouraged to make intellectual and creative connections between acoustic epistemologies, sonic awareness, sound environments and musical responses in their own society.
Learning Outcomes:	On completion of this subject students should be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Demonstrate an understanding of how different societies react sonically and musically to their physical environment # make critical, informed and sophisticated responses to new ideas, methodologies and theoretical frameworks in the study of music; # integrate a reflective knowledge and an informed understanding of cross-cultural and intercultural concepts and behaviours in musical production from different times and places into their professional and intellectual lives; # conduct independent ethnographic and secondary research in ethnomusicology; # make intelligent response to aural sources; and # write in a scholarly manner appropriate to the discipline.
Assessment:	Essay of 1500 words due at the end of semester (40%); a cumulative assignment of 2000 words due for review mid semester and final submission at the end of the semester (40%); a one-hour listening test at the end of the semester (20%).
