Subject Overview:	This subject is an introduction to contemporary Australian politics with an emphasis on what makes Australia unique and with an assessment of how democratic institutions have developed over time. In addition to examining the formal political system, we will also be debating the role of citizenship and participation in Australian political culture. So while dealing with institution arrangements such as parliament, the executive, the bureaucracy, policy-making, federalism and the High Court, we will also look at citizens' activism, in social movements as well as in political parties, and examine key theoretical arguments and political ideologies. The subject is based on the proposition that politics is important because it is how we shape our future.
Learning Outcomes:	On completion of this subject students should: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # understand key foundations and critical concepts in the discipline of political science; # demonstrate a detailed and critical understanding of the institutions of Australian democracy; # develop an understanding of competing interpretations of political ideologies, ideas and arguments about the role of citizens in a democracy; # demonstrate the ability to engage critically and insightfully in contemporary political debates; # demonstrate the development of skills in critical analysis and evaluation as applied to Australian politics; # demonstrate the ability to argue a considered position in oral and written presentations; # work respectfully and productively in small and large groups with other students.
Assessment:	1. A draft discussion paper of 500 words (10%) due in week 4 of the semester; 2. A critical reflective essay of 2000 words (35%) which will incorporate the draft above, due in week 8 of the semester; 3. A take-home short essay assignment totalling 2000 words (35%) due during the examination period; 4. The remaining 20% of total marks are (provisionally) assigned to

	student engagement in the subject, and this involves a fourth assessment task. It consists of the student group designing and running a political exercise to make a decision on whether this 20% will, or will not, be assigned to assessment of student engagement in tutorials and in this larger decision-making process. Hurdle Requirement: This subject has a minimum Hurdle Requirement of 75% tutorial attendance. Regular participation in tutorials is required. Assessment submitted late without an approved extension will be penalised at 10% per working day. In-class tasks missed without approval will not be marked. All pieces of written work must be submitted to pass this subject.
