Subject Overview:	Public sector budget frameworks are premised on efficiency, effectiveness and the ethical use and management of taxpayer's money, and accountability under legislation, the audit process, the estimates committee process, and more broadly to parliament, the public, the media and private contractors. This subject considers how public managers and ministers work within these frameworks to balance at times competing objectives and political undercurrents. Students will be introduced to the budget cycle, fraud control plans, audit committees and the Auditor-General, tendering and procurement, risk management, appropriations and more recent innovations such as the Charter of Budget Honesty and the Parliamentary Budget Office. Students will acquire practical skills in how to manage public expenditure and to design tax and social welfare systems, while also appreciating how budgets are political and the interplay between governments and capital markets.
Learning Outcomes:	On successful completion of this subject, students should have: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # developed a clear understanding of how government is financed; # an awareness of the macroeconomic framework underpinning public policy; # developed a greater understanding of the different accountability and political processes; and # acquired a range of practical and analytical skills applicable to designing and working with budgets.
