Subject Overview:	This subject is intended as an 'integrative' capstone course, and as such does not introduce to the students substantial new material; but rather, provides them with a vehicle for applying and integrating the knowledge and skills they have already acquired. In particular, groups of students will be asked to undertake an exercise that simulates the management of a firm in preparation for their transition back into the workplace. They will also be asked to reflect on an integrative activity they have undertaken during their degree.
Learning Outcomes:	On completion of this subject, students should be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # use existing financial, accounting, production and marketing data in order to develop a forward looking business plan, # evaluate the inflow of information to adapt and change their operating plans in response to changing circumstances. # use the available financial, accounting, production and marketing information to assess and diagnose the results of their decisions, and # cogently explain and defend their decisions.
