Subject Overview:	This subject introduces teacher candidates to methods of teaching humanities. It prepares teacher candidates to teach history, geography, and civics and citizenship in the compulsory years of secondary schooling. Teacher candidates examine the Australian Curriculum/ AusVELS. By exploring the principles of learning and teaching that underpin effective classrooms and the research that supports these principles, this subject widens teacher candidates' appreciation of exemplary teaching in this area. They examine literacy and numeracy strategies appropriate to learning and teaching the humanities. For example, teacher candidates engage with literacy strategies for reading sources. They also address numeracy strategies; teacher candidates need to use evidence such as tables, charts and graphs to explain change over time in history and geography. The subject engages with best practice in teaching and learning of humanities. It explores frameworks of the humanities and links theory to practice. Through reflection on leading research, teacher candidates develop a personal philosophy of teaching in the humanities. The subject examines planning for learning, teaching strategies, approaches to inquiry in the classroom, and current methods of assessment and evaluation.
