Subject Overview:	In France since the 19th century, the preparation, serving and consumption of food, in both the domestic and public space, has been emblematic of French bourgeois cultural hegemony. In this subject students will examine the elaboration of normative codes relating to food and wine and the emergence of gastronomy as an expression of cultural dominance and identity. Students will also study challenges to bourgeois cuisine and gastronomy as have been experienced since at least the mid-20th century, resulting primarily from the colonial history of France and its current multi-cultural situation. Students will engage with a wide variety of discursive practices including treatises on taste and gastronomy, recipe books, restaurant critiques, works of fiction and contemporary film.
Learning Outcomes:	On successful completion of this subject, students should:

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> # have gained an appreciation of academic French through the confident use of sophisticated oral and written French at level B2/C1 of the Common European Framework for Languages; # have gained an overview of the development of the French culinary tradition from the Middle-Age to the present, and an appreciation of the different factors leading to the emergence of the concepts of taste, terroir and French cuisine in 19th century; # be able to understand the impact left by the French colonisation of other countries, such as Algeria and Indochina, on the cooking and eating habits of the indigenous peoples, and how the migration of these peoples to France during and after the colonial period has contributed to the shaping of today's French cuisine; # be able to draw from, and reflect upon, one's own food experiences to gain an understanding of the major role of food as a marker of cultural and national identity, as well as the site of cultural resistance in the context of immigration and globalisation; # be able to interpret and give a critical analysis of French literary texts, recipe books, films, documentaries, and other media related to the topic of food and French gastronomy; # have gained the confidence and competence in conducting small research projects, either independently or collaboratively, in the field of French Studies; # be able to employ learning and research technologies in French and English.
