Subject Overview:	This subject focuses on land and its management in Australia. Government has sought to ensure economically efficient land use and exploitation through the grant of rights to use land for particular purposes. This has been fundamental to the settlement and economic development of Australia since 1788. The recognition of native title across Australia has brought a new emphasis to the management of the public estate, including land subject to native title rights and interests. This subject examines the legal regimes governing the management of land by state and territory agencies and by corporations that manage native title rights and interests. Specifically, it examines legislation and instruments creating particular management regimes including those concerning national parks, pastoral leases, and Crown land reserves, with a particular focus on Victoria. The lecturer has many years of academic scholarship in this area, engagement in law reform debates and practical client-focused legal advice. Principal topics include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li># Australian land use and management since 1788</li><li># Constitutional basis for land management</li></ul>
