Subject Overview:	One of the main challenges for today's managers is effectively communicating vision and inspiring employees to achieve that vision within team-based work structures. This subject deals with this challenge by examining the interaction of leadership and team processes. A focus will be on critically evaluating the role of leaders in organisations with high involvement work practices (for example, employee involvement and empowerment) and the role of human resource practices in identifying and developing organisational leaders. Topics considered will include: contemporary theories of leadership; the role of managers as organisational leaders; human resources and leadership challenges of the team-based organisational structure; managing team dynamics; the effectiveness of shared leadership; human resource strategies for developing organisational leaders; and the impact of high involvement work practices on leading and managing teams.
Learning Outcomes:	On successful completion of this subject, students should be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> # Examine and evaluate the integrated nature of HRM strategy, policy and practice across the individual, group/team and organisational levels; # Explore the interaction of human systems and processes across these three levels; # Analyse the role played by stakeholders in the development of organisational policy and practice; and # Develop a critical appreciation of the nature of organisational leadership and the role of leaders.
