Subject Overview:	February 2016 Topic China's Foreign Policy: A Chinese Perspective Professor Pan Zhongqi, School of International Relations and Public Affairs, Fudan University, Shanghai, China With the historical rise of China, China's foreign policy and international behaviour have been hotly debated in both policy and academic circles. Key questions have been raised and approached generally from a western perspective. These include how China handles its border and maritime disputes with neighboring countries, how China's foreign policy principles and initiatives have been proposed and implemented, whether China will become a revisionist state or a status quo power in the dynamic regional and global orders, how China manages its relations with major powers in the world, and what role China will play in global governance. Various IR theoretical perspectives have attempted to provide answers to these and related questions, but there is little agreement among western analysts. This subject will provide an alternative Chinese perspective on these issues. It will begin with an exploration of the Chinese way of thinking, and distinguish it from western approaches. In addition to contending IR theories, the distinctive Chinese way of thinking will a fresh perspective that will help to decipher China's otherwise puzzling foreign policy. To better understand China's international engagement, this subject will examine key issues including China's foreign policymaking mechanism, new foreign policy initiatives such as One Belt and One Road, China's regional engagement, China's handling of land border and maritime disputes, China's relations with

	major powers such as the US, China's position towards international order, and China and global governance.
